Democratic National Convention
Is Opened at St. Louis with the President in Complete Control

By JOHN EDWIN NEVIN,
International News Service Staff Correspondent.

Convention Hall, St. Louis,
June 14.—With President Wilson in complete control, Democracy's
"mass ratification meeting," as the 1916 convention of the party now in power in the nation will be known in history, got under way today in an atmosphere of enthusiasm and confident determination.

From the moment that William F.
McCombs, chairman of the national committee, called the opening session to order until the temporary organization had been perfected and adjournment taken until tomorrow, the outstanding note in the proceedings was one of the utmost self-reliance and entire confidence.

National Chairman McCombs made it very plain from the outset that he and his associates expect victory this November. He, together with Temporary Chairman Martin H. Glynn, praised the national administration's set in the strongest of languages and defended it from the assaults made upon it last week in Chicago. Mc-Combs made it emphatically plain that the Democrats have no desire to do business with the Progressive party leaders.

DON'T MIND THE HEAT.
Today's session of the convention was exceedingly harmonious. The atmosphere in the convention hall was excellent, but the delegates did not seem to mind.

It was just 12:31 when Chairman McCombs stepped onto the speaker's rostrum and smashed down the gavel calling the convention to order. The national chairman, whose work four years ago made the election of President Wilson possible and who now was retiring voluntarily from that post, was given a warm reception by the assembled delegates.

After prayer by the Rev. John P.
Lafayette, former Governor of New York, Mr. McCombs introduced as temporary chairman and delivered his keynote speech.

When the doors at the back of the structure were thrown open at 2:30 o'clock only a few spectators were waiting.
Most of the delegates had slept last night and were in no hurry to come to the celebrations decorated with the national flag.

Shored Up Street While Paraders Were on March

While the Boston Preparatory Parade was taking place, men were working beneath the surface of Kilnston street shoring it up, as the result of the collapse of an old wooden sewer, according to the statement of Mayor Varley today.

Speaking in connection with a contract for $11,000 for a new sewer in Canal street, the mayor said that there were nearly 100 miles of wooden sewers in Boston, which are constantly falling to pieces, and must be replaced. He said that, because of the collapse of the old Kilnston street sewer, it was at first thought it would be necessary to change the route of the parade.

ADAMS MEMORIAL IS UNVEILED TODAY

Lexington, Va., June 14.—The monument to Charles Francis Adams of Boston was unveiled at Washington and Lee University today. Henry B.
Anderson delivered an address on the life of Mr. Adams, paying high tribute to his friendship to the South and to Robert E. Lee, which helped establish cordial relations between North and South.

VAN ZANDT MANSION AT NEWPORT SOLD

Newport, R. I., June 14.—The colonial mansion on Pelham street once owned and occupied by the late Governor Charles Collins Van Zandt, was sold at auction today for $25,000.
It was here that President Hayes was entertained upon his visit to Newport.

T. R. SICKON BACK TO NEW YORK FOR PEPPER

A doctor was summoned and he was rushed to the late's office.
He complained of a pain in his side.

The ex-President looked and acted like a very sick man this morning when he went in the play to meet his son Kermit and his wife, who arrived from New York at 8:30 o'clock from Champan, on the transport Kilpatrick, now in use as a passenger steamer.

His old smile seemed to have entirely vanished. He walked about the stair with halting steps and frequently placed his hand against his left side, as though in pain. His face twisted nervously. He smiled wanly at his son and daughter-in-law when he caught sight of them and walked slowly up the gangplank to meet them.

WEEKLY DOCTORS' OFFICE.
The colonel was accompanied to the pier by Mrs. Roosevelt, Mrs. Richard D. Kirby, his daughter, Dr. Derby and Archie Roosevelt.

About half an hour after the boat locked a young member of the Roosevelt party went to a telephone and called up a doctor. The colonel, who was feeling badly, had a stitch in his side and needed treatment. He suggested that the doctor go to the pier to look after him. The physician evidently did not look upon the case as very serious, and the woman who indicated that he had suggested that the colonel be sent to his office.

Mrs. Derby later denied that her father was seriously ill. "I do not know where these alarming reports originated," she said. "I am sure that he feels better now. He has been suffering from a bad cold and has been coughing a great deal. Dr. Derby took him in a motor physician to his home."

BROKEN HIM PAINFUL.
Secretary McCall said that Colonel Roosevelt had strained a nerve during the trip. He said that the colonel had had to remain in town tonight and had decided to remain in town tonight and had decided to remain in town tonight.

"One year ago I broke a rib on my left side. I was riding horseback and fell there. The roughing spells which I have had have been a great deal of trouble to me. It is ridiculous but painful. I have been a great deal of trouble to me and I have been a great deal of trouble to me."

He had lunch with Raymond Robins, chairman of the Progressive convention, and National Committee men from Illinois.

Dealers Must Run the Business
Properly, Declares Appointee;
Gow Demoted by the Governor

Governor McCall went to the Executive Council today the nomination of Fletcher Roney to succeed Robert A. Wools on the Licensing Board for the city of Boston (the Excise Board), and designated the new member to be chairman of the board as well.

Mr. Roney is a Boston lawyer who has defended many suits for the Boston Elevator Company, is a Republican, a widower, a clubman and a Littérateur. He is fifty-five years old and lives on Bay State road.

In a brief statement, following his nomination, Mr. Roney declared that the liquor business is legal in Boston and that dealers are entitled to fair treatment, but they must run the business properly.

The identity of the suspect cannot be made public at this time, of course, but it is understood that the person is a man who has been under suspense surveillance, and the police have been waiting only for the proper time to move.

Dead and Shaw were first brought into the district court, where a large number of people had gathered, including boy friends of the two youths. Young Shaw smilingly greeted them, while Dead gazed about the courtroom, a broad grin on his face.

Shaw was questioned by Benjamin
B. Towne, assistant district attorney, and was engaged in animated conversation with the boy when Attorney William J. McCarthy of Boston, counsel for the youths, entered. He immediately looked toward the rear of the courtroom, where he prohibited further communication.

BOYS' EXCUSE.
After trying the cases in the District Court, Judge Briggs adjourned to the juvenile session. The charge against the two boys of stealing the bicycle at 47 was the same, and Chief Clerk asked for their discharges.
They were given them, and they were taken to a consulting room by their counsel.

Shaw was asked for a statement,
and replied:
"I ain't got nothing to say."

For a First Class "Joke"---

Study the Working of the United States "Tax" on Telephone Messages

Copyright, 1916, by the War Finance

It was necessary to raise extra money for "war." The Government arranged what it was pleased to call a tax to be laid on the telephone companies. But did the telephone companies pay it? DO they pay it? NOT IN THE LEAST; it is not customary for corporations to pay taxes when there are little people that can pay them perfectly well.

You go to the telephone booth and ask for your number. The lady says, in a very nice, gentle voice, "Please deposit so much, for five minutes." And she adds, "After you finish speaking, please drop one penny for the Federal tax in the quarter slot."

AFTER you finish speaking you pay the Government. But BEFORE you begin speaking you pay the telephone company.

Is there anything more humorous than this system of taxing a great private monopoly which ought to be Government property?

In the first place, the telephone company pays no tax; that is put on the backs of the people who use the telephones, and they pay for telephone service about three times what they ought to pay.

Not only that, but the telephone company shows its appreciation of the fact that the Government is a joke by collecting its own money from the people first, and casually adding, in substance, this: "If you are silly enough to do so, AFTER you have paid me and finished your talk, you can drop one cent in the box for Uncle Sam."

We have observed that at least twice out of three times the operator does not even mention the Federal tax.

How many times out of three the average citizen, alone in the booth with his conscience, and poor Uncle Sam asking for the penny, GIVES THAT PENNY we are not prepared to say.

Will the Government gentlemen in charge of this "telephone tax" kindly let us know how much money they get out of it, and ascertain by examining the telephone company's books the number of pennies paid to the Government compared with the number of telephone calls costing fifteen cents or more?

The people of the United States complain of their Government.

When the choice of those that attend to the business of the people is left to accident or corrupt politicians; when the rich refuse to pay their taxes, and the corporations laugh at the idea that THEY should be taxed; when the little man in the small cottage pays taxes for its full value and the great mansion is taxed not one-quarter, you may say that the people are getting about as good a government as they deserve—and probably a great deal better than they deserve, since it was started by men better than they are.

The people at the top know too much. Those at the bottom know and think too little. That's our trouble.

Senator Crane's Tact; Governor McCall's Leadership

FORMER Senator Winthrop Murray Crane gave the State and the country an excellent example of his political vision, tact and discretion, not only during the recent Republican convention, but during the months which preceded it.

Senator Crane is a member of the "old guard" which was so badly repudiated by a great majority of the Republican party at the last national election. Personally he is not in the remotest respect a man of progressive principles. His instincts all jump with big business and with a government by the few and for the few. He probably would admit that he believes in a government by the few, but would not admit and would be sincere in his denial that he believes in a government for a few.

However, he sincerely respects those who are progressive and who suffer from him in political policies. This enables him to meet and to compromise without unnecessary difficulty wherever it seems to him wise, and this ability to compromise discreetly is of the essence of Mr. Crane's political sagacity and capacity. It is founded upon his respect for those who disagree with him and his ability to appreciate that there are always two sides to a question.

Undoubtedly either Judge Hughes or Colonel Roosevelt was the strongest man who could have been selected to oppose President Wilson. Probably Judge Hughes was the stronger of the two, because he has had no national political contest and had left no wounds. Therefore, from Mr. Crane's point of view, he is by far the wisest selection, as Mr. Crane is one of the wisest conservative leaders in the country.

Governor McCall, too, showed political leadership and moral courage in his refusal to pay petty politics by casting a futile vote for favorite sons. He voted immediately for the man he thought ought to be nominated and the other less far-sighted Massachusetts delegates were obliged to follow his lead on the third ballot.

Governor McCall thus demonstrated his leadership among progressive Republicans as Mr. Crane demonstrated his among the conservatives.

JUNE GRADUATES

The Conductor

By William F. Kirk

"I TOLD you to stop at Beach street, sir!"

He shouted in terrible tones.

"I won't have a word from you, no sir!"

You ought to be breaking up stones!"

He glared at the young conductor.

Who was trying to smile and stay good.

Though he looked like a boxing instructor

Who could take his own part if he would.

"I'll have you reported today, sir!"

I'll see that you get your discharge

You ought to be driving a drag, sir,

Or plumping up bricks on a barge."

The young conductor, still smiling,

Though pale beneath his cooling of fan,

Ignored all the slurs and reviling

And didn't talk back to his man.

WELL-GROOMED was the passenger gabby.

From tile to his black leather ties;

The patient conductor looked shabby

And weariness deadened his eyes;

But calmly he smiled at the other

And bravely continued his smile.

Which man was the gentleman, brother—

This man or the one with the tie?

Our Skill and Weakness

By C. F. Thwing

THE American has come to believe in the expert. Civilization consists in a series of expert judgments followed by great achievements. The planner does our planning, the doctor our treating, the cook our cooking, the preacher our preaching.

But by a singular condition in the higher realm of thought and of service we often go far astray.

We believe that if one has served well, for instance, as the director of a university, he has thereby proved that he will make a good president or an Ambassador; if he has proved his ability as a lawyer, it is therefore believed that he would make a good president of a life insurance company; if he has proved himself able as the Governor of a State, we imagine he also is fitted to be chancellor of a university.

We reason that because Colonel Goethals has built the Panama Canal to the world's satisfaction, he will serve equally well as a chief executive of a city.

Experience proves the contrary. Highly specialized ability in one particular field means failure in another sphere.

Four men were made President of the United States who were conspicuous in the Civil War: Grant, Hayes, Garfield and Harrison. Grant, of course, was made President because he had been the commanding general. He revealed more qualities as a President, but he was not successful as an executive, and the other three also failed.

We should think that government is the most important business to which the individual or a community can address itself. If demands, if anything demands, the expert of the most efficient training, of the broadest and highest vision, and of the most fundamental education.

We act, however, as though we thought government is the only business in the world in which no training is necessary.

What we lack in America above all else is the man who can be detached from any private interest, man who has the sense of disinterestedness when acting for all the citizens, and the power that goes with that service.

Civilization and Waste

By Woods Hutchinson, M. D.

The World's Foremost Writer on Medical Subjects

PROBLEM is that there should be greater economy, a more careful and thrifty utilization of remains and left-overs in the American kitchen, so as to diminish the enormous bulk of kitchen waste which has to be dealt with.

Undoubtedly some improvement could be obtained in this regard without endangering the great American stomach, but the more carefully we study the actual evolution and pedigree in the average kitchen of hashes and minces and steaks and "made dishes" and second-hand scraps puddings of all sorts, in which onions and strong spices or sugar and flavoring extracts are used to cover the dying breath of off-color meat and moldy bread, or curdled milk, or berries which are too far gone to serve fresh and undisguised, the more deep-rooted become our suspicions of their wholesomeness.

We're "from Missouri" whenever they are set before us, and they've got to prove a perfect and incontestable pedigree as to freshness of their mixed ancestry or else pass a board of health test for potencies and bacteria.

Economy is excellent in its place, but that is in buying rather than in cooking. No small share of the increased modern cost of living is due to the higher standard of purity, quality and soundness which we insist upon in our food.

At the same time the conscientious maintenance of a high (and, in the long run, profitable) standard of absolute cleanliness and healthfulness for everything cooked in and served from our kitchens will inevitably result in a considerable amount of waste of tainted or doubtful food material and scraps.

When we doubt play the garbage can" should be the white rule of the cooking game. And it is far safer to impose an absolute ban on the Street Cleaning Department than upon our own digestion.

It is well to bear this in mind, because one of the most frequent and quickly urged by those who are struggling to solve the garbage

Moving Picture Awaits Garrett P. Serviss Says Its Own Shakespeare

One of the Strongest Sources of Its Fascination Lies in Its Ability to Defy the Laws of Physical Nature Without Shocking Our Minds

By Garrett P. Serviss

THERE is one certain, small degree there are so, but this is only an incidental quality. The business of the ordinary drama, is to represent life as it is, with artistic management of lights and shades. The moving picture drama uses life only as a basis, and proceeds to erect upon it ideal scenes and incidents which cannot exist, or occur, in the actual world.

In this direction it is clearly capable of almost unlimited development. Photography with its mechanical accessories can play with space and time, accelerating, retarding, separating, combining events and scenes at will. One of the greatest sources of its power is that it can drop out of the field of view almost everything that obstructs its purpose.

As we have seen before, it may defy all the laws of physics, and do so so deftly that the spectators lose the sense of incongruity, and, for the moment, accept what they see as if it were the representation in all respects, of a real, or at least possible, life.

Then, if the scenario has been constructed with a profound knowledge of human psychology, the onlooker experiences a deep feeling of gratification in yielding their minds unresistingly to the influences of the waking dream into which they have been plunged.

Some Plays So Full of Imagination Stage Cannot Do Them Justice

There are some plays of Shakespeare, as well as others, which are so full of the magic of the imagination that they cannot be adequately represented upon the stage. Probably every body will agree that the "Midsummer Night's Dream" is one of these. When you read it, you are unconsciously put aside the physical difficulties, so that the real persons and the scenes of actual life blend harmoniously enough with the imaginary characters and the glimpses of fairyland.

On the stage the dreamworld, inevitably, must be sacrificed. It becomes a puppet show, or a ballet. But the ethereal nature of the moving picture, if delicately treated, might enable it to present the great "Dream" to a countless number of spectators as effectively as it is presented to the mind's eye of the solitary reader. Then the photograph, managed with equal delicacy, might save the great poetic lines, and so double the effect.

The mission of the moving picture is to satisfy the imaginative side of the mind where it seeks to free itself from bonds unbreakable to the physical man. This new form of drama may have its Shakespeare some day, but he is not visible yet.

Inklings and Thinkings

By Wex Jones

The trouble with a lot of favorite sons is that they're not favorites.

A limited experience in planting vegetables makes us wish they were more like Washington office holders. Most of the vegetables won't either grow or sell.

Life's mysteries: Farthest past rates.

Massachusetts millionaire drank hair tonic regularly and talked confidently to the moon. But his friends pointed out with pride to the fact that he had never been to bed with his hat on. Looks as if the jury would disagree.

Philadelphia paper says that a man wanting to buy a car should carefully figure how much he can afford to pay, "and then buy one at half the price." And then you will cost him the same.

Quoted any freckles yet?

Philadelphia artist named Hoban laughed heartily at the news that a New Jersey woman knocked out a burglar with her shoe. If it comes to that we don't believe a Philadelphia girl would be able to pick up her own shoe.

The Falling Sickness

People used to suppose it was of supernatural origin. Perhaps Ananias and Sapphira died of it. Now Science has found the germ which causes it. You will read the remarkable narrative in next Sunday's Boston AMERICAN.

Machine politics always seems more profitable than machine poetry.

Legal technicians too frequently turn in the interest of the rug.

Love that can only be exhibited in the form of jealousy is not worth much.

Unless the Hesperus laughs the tale of four troubles is not interesting.
